EVP in abandoned town

Posted by Grupo Alpha - 05 Jul 2011 23:38

Greetings friends

Here you exclusive, one of the EVP will publish on our website and form part of our last fieldwork. I hope you like it and tomorrow also enjoy the full course. Hugs to all

http://bit.ly/onFvIc]

==========

Re: EVP in abandoned town

Posted by DonnaC - 10 Jul 2011 20:35

Cool EVP!

I remember that my first ever EVP was in the Cuban language and from the East Martello Museum , Key West, FL. It was caught while sittinging in the "Cuban Refugee Raft" exhibit. It said, "Muy Mal." Fortunately for me, I took a few years of High School Spanish and understood.

Thanks for sharing this with us!

==========

Re: EVP in abandoned town

Posted by Cale - 10 Jul 2011 20:48

Good one. I couldn't make out what they were saying. What did you make out of it?

==========

Re: EVP in abandoned town

Posted by Grupo Alpha - 10 Jul 2011 21:53

DonnaC wrote:

Cool EVP!

I remember that my first ever EVP was in the Cuban language and from the East Martello Museum , Key West, FL. It was caught while sittinging in the "Cuban Refugee Raft" exhibit. It said, "Muy Mal." Fortunately for me, I took a few years of High School Spanish and understood.

Thanks for sharing this with us!

Thank you DonnaC , I'm so glad you liked it. Indeed, Cuba is also a country full of legends and mysteries, I love to meet someday. a hug

==========

Re: EVP in abandoned town

Posted by Grupo Alpha - 10 Jul 2011 21:55

_____

Cale wrote:

Good one. I couldn't make out what they were saying. What did you make out of it?

Hi Cale! Do not worry, it's normal not to understand at first, once you've trained your ear to hear her insurance easier. Anyway, note that the language is Spanish and EVP guess that also makes it more complicated to understand. a hug

==========