A Residual Haunting Question

Posted by Keith - 24 Sep 2011 12:28

---

If a residual haunt is a moment captured and recorded in time and is replayed periodically is it possible to see a residual haunt of one's self of an earlier time in one’s own life?

Just wondering.

Keith

==========

Re: A Residual Haunting Question

Posted by Wes_Forsythe - 26 Sep 2011 11:52

---

Just to throw a monkey wrench into the original question...

Not all of us believe in residual hauntings. I personally believe that all hauntings are "intelligent" and any thing that we see or hear that does not ackowledge us (i.e. the soldier still marching the battlefield) is just a manifestation of the haunt of the intelligent spirt.

Using the usual assumptions that ghosts are real and are the spirits (or at least some part of) of the deceased they would probably be used to us not seeing them and feel free to go about their business of re-living whatever moment or event in their past that they feel is important. In other words they may just be ignoring us on occasion. Wal-Mart sales people do it all the time so why can't ghosts?

But just because I do not believe in the residual concept does NOT mean I disbelieve it either. I call myself agnostic on it.

==========

Re: A Residual Haunting Question

Posted by Keith - 26 Sep 2011 12:45

---

TressesOfNephthys,

Thanks for the replies. Watching the Reverie unfold as an observer while in the Reverie is a hard concept to get my mind wrapped around too I chalked this up to unknown long ago. I ask myself. Why watch a dream you are in? No answers I've come up with makes sense yet it is what it is. And eventually the purpose of the whole Reverie is made clear. The answers are either found in the past or are answered in the future. I never know which until the memory of the Reverie is revived by an event or triggering of an event past learned of.

The closest I have ever come to a direct answer was when I was in a horrific car accident at 15 years old. What occurred between the realization of death coming and the time I awoke from the accident. (seconds later) made me realize then that this was no longer just dreams. I saw the accident's results long before the accident happened but i didn't see myself in the accident. After that I began seeing in the second perspective or observing myself within the Reverie. I no longer called these dreams, it was to be or had been reality. I figure if the answers were known ahead of the time I may be able to change the results and I don't think that I or any human was ever to be allowed to do that. Only God writes the future and decides what that future is. For some reason I get glimpses of what has been or will be but until the events have unfolded I am not allowed to know the connections between the Reverie and reality. Just my guess as to why the time lines are as they are but I continue to question all including the validity of what I know to be so. That is the one gift we all are given, the ability to look for answers to that which we don't understand.

As a side note:

Sometimes I don't want to know the reason for the Reverie's I watch. Sometimes the unknown is welcomed by me and I am in no hurry to know why.

Keith

==========

Re: A Residual Haunting Question

Posted by Keith - 26 Sep 2011 13:11

_____

amoonwolfe,

Thanks for the input. Past live regressions. Within a Reverie? I suppose that could happen and may explain some of the events of the past I was to learn of later. Though it does little to explain those to be found out later as was to happen in the future. I'll consider the advice for regression but have came to the conclusion that the past events I have had was to make me understand the events of the past. Not to relive them in my opinion. Those snips of events are different in that there is no urgency to know why they were shown. Where when the events to come leave me exhausted when done. It is odd to have some of the events that years later I still have no conclusion but I have come to realize that time is different from one realm to another. Our 24 hour day means little to those who see time on a different plane.

Thanks for the tips, someday I will likely do just that if for no other reason to get another perspective. I find the medical field approach to any of this is a slice and dice opportunity and without ever answering a single question they have all the answers. What a waste of time that was. If they can't cut it out and hold it, it doesn't exist. That is why so many doctors don't believe in the Devine, to them they ARE God, choosing who lives and who dies on a regular basis.

Keith

==========

Re: A Residual Haunting Question

Posted by Keith - 26 Sep 2011 13:28

_____

Wes_Forsythe,

No worries here on that wrench. lol. I am new to all this part of the equation (ghost hunting) and am not even informed enough to have an opinion so I welcome all information at this point. I learn then develop my own conclusion once I feel I have sufficient information to make a conclusion. I believe that will be many years down the road because I know so little now and there are so many questions and so much to learn that I may never come to any conclusions.

Measuring the intelligence of something not fully understood is a tough thing to do. I have witnessed enough on the few hunts I have had the opportunity to go on, I consider myself very lucky to have been invited to those places, for they have brought perspective. A view of that of a believer in that there is something going on and has brought me to realize I need to have more knowledge on a first hand basis.

I will always be grateful to the investigator that allowed me the opportunity to learn more. He is Another of us who looks for answers of that which we know little of.

LOL. I agree with you on your observation of Wal-Mart... If ever you want to feel invisible that is one place to see what it feels like. LOL

Keith

==========