I agree with Josh on this one.. I had to stare for a Looonnnggg time, to seek familiar facial or body patterns, and this is what my opinion is... if something were manifesting, I think it would be more than made of the spectrum of colors already present , or there would be loss of contrast or maybe added white coloring, if there is no distinction from the background of leaves and trees no matter how much you stare, and all that comes out to me is common shapes.. not necessarily a boy.

When I stare hard enough this is what I see (and this is not to mock you or your investigation..)

on the tree trunk.. I might see a white clown, to the lower left, a dog, and slightly higher and to the right possibly a face looking to the left, then again to the right against the tree possibly another face with its mouth open

I would assume if something is able to seen by the eye it would have attributes other than shape that separate it from its environment. I would love to see any other evidence you guys caught, unfortunately I do not think its paranormal in this photo

I still think it's nothing more than the mind seeing a familiar pattern in an unfamiliar picture. Couple that with the fact that you have to point it out and strain incredibly hard to see really puts me on the "nothing there" side of things.
