Sorry folks, my wife and I have been going to this place for awhile now; and we didn't even think of photographing the front entrance.

So here is what you have to expect when you take a trip to this very peaceful and spiritual place.

I would also encourage those of you who want to learn how to become more sensitive and aware of spirits around you to go to a place like this and spend time there. This has been very good training ground for us and we will in turn be using our intuition more than investigative equipment for upcoming excursions.

Another great image, although this one captures a sense of darkness. You can almost feel the depression within this image.

Thanks CC,

I converted the image to sepia to give it an antique/vintage kind of feel. Here is the B & W version. Like this a little better?

Exactly, that's what I've been trying to tell him. He needs to publish his images in a book or calendar.

Thanks my friend. We'll see about what to do with those photos. We've been getting more busy as of late and haven't been on in a few days. What have I missed???

After having visited this cemetery with you personally, I must say that this shot totally and I mean TOTALLY captures the essence of that location. The surreal sepia tone and perspective captured here just really gives it the period look and recaptures the location's previous glory.
