Caught This "Face" Thought It Interesting...

Hi everyone, my group was attending a "watch party" for the season finale' of Fact or Faked on Syfy at the bar that was featured on the show that night - Colburns in Humble, TX. We have investigated there and gotten some really nice evidence and I am personal friends with the current owner as we attended high school together. Anyway we caught this pic, and found it intriguing I know there are scientific explanations for this phenomena as I am a long time investigator, but none the less with all the other stuff going on there, found this photo intriguing and that it warranted further investigation and a discussion from my peers....what do you guys think? The compilation photo contains a reference photo of a former owner of the bar that is deceased and rumored to still abide there so to speak...

Glad to have you here!

I looked at this image, and I personally think this particular image is just a smudge on the reflective surface. When you brighten it up you can see many other smudges.

Reflecttives are such a mixed bag of beans. Its hard to really pull anything usable from them, especially in a still photograph.

Although I have no doubt that the location has lots of activity! I would love to discuss putting a Static IR webcam into the location for a period of time. Let viewers see if they can spot some activity.

With our groups experience in investigating we also are open to the fact that it could be smudges, however 2 pictures, one taken 3 seconds prior to this one and one taken 3-5 seconds after this one, same camera, same angle - you know those instances when the photographer goes "wait a minute lets get one more..lol" anyway show absolutely nothing! That intrigued us regarding this pic...anyway, whatever the case if this is smudges - it's a most happy, coincidence that they happen to appear to look like the former owner who died there...thanks for the response!!
