Love this video, you can see it moving even after you move around. It just starts back up again.

No, nothing was coming from the vent when I took this video, I actually had the fan and central heat turned off as I had been cooking earlier in the kitchen and it was hot in the house. The only thing running was the range fan over my stove (that hum that can be heard) and that was only because I hadn't turned that off from when I made dinner earlier in the evening. I was standing by the stove when I took the video.

It would be awesome to see a longer video. How often does this happen?

How often does it happen? I take it you are talking about m Kitchen Angel being moved.... it's only happened twice (that I have seen). The first night where I dragged the laptop into the kitchen and the next day while I was washing dishes at the sink. It's not happened since. And as a note, in the time since then, I've had the central heat on full time and not at timed intervals due to the temperatures, and even with the heated air coming through the vents, it still isn't moving. Am looking in there as a double check right now as I am typing this.

_____

I said the first time I saw this, the spoon moves eerily similar to a pendulum.

If you aren't willing to do it yourself, I would find someone skilled in that area and see what happens....jmho
