Haunted Law Office

When I got out of the Navy in '89, I returned to Mableton, Georgia. I started hanging around some old high school friends, and one of them, Harold, has a brother-in-law who is a lawyer in Marietta. The office he rented for his practice, was in the upstairs of an old house just off the square in Marietta and was reported to have piano music coming from a closet in his office. Turns out that are used to be a piano room before being renovated. But the big report was a lady singing down in the community kitchen are downstairs. One day Harold had to go get some forms for him and asked me to come along. when we got there, Harold noticed he forgot the keys. There was no one there, so we went around back and climbed in through one of the windows up top. Like I said, NO ONE was there except us two. We got the forms and before we left, we heard the singing. we checked upstairs to see if there was a radio on , wasn't one. The singing was definitely coming from down the stairs in the kitchen area. I was clear as a bell, and definitely not a radio. I could tell you what the words were, it was more of a humming. No, we did not go down at the time. We were in our early twenties and scared to death. I have never been back, but would love to go back and check it out now.

That sounds like an interesting place to investigate. Have you ever checked to see if there were other reports since? It would be interesting to do an internet search of the area to see what comes up. Also to see if there were any deaths in that building. The south has so much history, especially in parts of Georgia.

I just did a quick search and found this:

www.ghostsofmarietta.com/

Now, mind you, I'm no big fan of any form of Haunted tours, but may still be worth a look to see if the location you're talking about is now on the list. I just think the tours tend to commercialize and exploit the the field, and in so doing minimize its credibility.

Since then, I've never checked it out. But I will be contacting my friend and try to get the address and see if this place is included in this tour. I do have to agree with you. I think on those tours you have no real chance of getting any really good evidence without contamination also. I'll let you know if I find anything out.
